How to change movie audio language in vlc android.

VLC Media Player has become quite a popular media player. If no media player will play your file, then VLC will do it seamlessly. The interface is quite simple, appealing and user friendly. However, some things are bound to go wrong and the language preference is usually a culprit. Users have tried installing and reinstalling VLC Media Player using the English language but when they open the media player, it is in some gibberish they cannot understand. In this article, we will explain why this happens and try to give you options for changing the VLC language to a preferred one. Why does VLC Media Player have another language even after installing it in English? We first have to understand how the English language and language preference works. When installing VLC media player for the first time, it will ask you to choose a language. This language is what the installation procedure will display the process in, if you select English, the installation process will be in English only. This does not affect the interface/menu language that will be used when you open VLC. There is another language in VLC media player known as the menu language. This is the language displayed when you use VLC. By default, this language is set to 'Automatic' such that it will pick the system language (the language you have set on your PC). Some system languages do not change much of the Windows system unless the language definitions have been installed. So what you have is an English interface but your system language has been set to Arabic or Filipino or German. The VLC Media Player interface will automatically use the system language. If it has been set to Arabic, the interface will be in Arabic. Another reason might be that the VLC Media Player installation file was customized for a certain language. The interface/menu will therefore display in this language despite your system language. The methods below will be effective in solving the language preference issue. Method 1: Change the language from the interface if you can understand the language used on the VLC Media Player interface, here is a quick guide to change the language. Open VLC Media Player Go to Tools menu and click on Preferences or Press CTRL + P Click on the interface tab/icon on the top left (should be selected by default) From the languages option, select the menu/interface language you prefer Click save or hit enter Close and Restart VLC. The effect should take place. Method 2: Change the language using shortcuts If you don't understand the language being displayed, it might be a little tough. But we have a shortcut guide to help you through. Open VLC Media Player Hit Ctrl + P to bring up the preferences window Click on the left topmost icon (green and orange in colour) The first dropdown text box that you see is the languages drop down menu Click on the dropdown box and select your preferred language. Hit Enter Close and Restart VLC Media Player for effect to take place. Method 3: Change your system language Since VLC Media Player Language has been set to 'Automatic' by default, it will pick your system language. Change your preferred system language by following these steps: Press Windows/Start Key + R Type intl.cpl in the run text box and hit enter. The System Region and Language options window comes up. In the format/language dropdown box, select your preferred language e.g. English (United Kingdom) Restart your PC for effect to take place. Your VLC should now be able to mimic the system language if the language preference has been set to 'Automatic'. If you're editing a video, you might want to remove the original audio track to get rid of eliminate ambient noise, loud or distracting sounds, or pave the way for a soundtrack. Fortunately, there are a variety of third-party applications and programs that make it easy to remove audio from video files and replace it with your own audio. Read on to learn how to remove an audio track from a video. The easiest way to eliminate the audio track is to use the VLC media player. VLC features sound removal on Windows PCs, Linux, and Mac. You can also use iMovie on macOS. Both VLC and iMovie are entirely free to use. VLC is the king of media players because it plays almost any video file in any format and has a range of powerful editing and manipulation tools for those who want to dig a little deeper. Open VLC and select Media -> Convert/Save. Click Add. Choose the media you want to remove audio from, and it will appear in the file selection box. Click Convert / Save from the small box on the bottom. Within the popup window, select the wrench icon. Select the Audio codec tab and uncheck the box next to Audio. Hit Create in the bottom section of the window. The Convert Window reappears. Enter a destination for the file at the bottom. Select Start to recode the media without audio. Remember to rename the file to something different in Step 7 to preserve the original. That way, if anything goes wrong or you want to undo the changes, the original remains untouched. You can always delete the original once you're sure you no longer need it. Note: Based on our tests in February of 2021, this does work. However, the video file without audio saved to an entirely different location from the one we set. Use the Cortana search bar to locate the video file and follow the path to retrieve it. The VLC Player's interface is slightly different for a Mac than it is for a PC. Following the same basic principles as above, here is how you remove the audio from a video on macOS. Open the VLC Play and click VLC Media Player in the upper left-hand corner. Select Preferences. Select the file location you'd like to save to (bear in mind that we selected Desktop and later found the audio file in Downloads, and on another test run, found it in the Videos folder) Click Choose and then Save at the bottom. Now go to File and select Convert/Stream. Click Open Media and select your video file. Under Choose Profile select Custom from the drop-down, then Customize. Click on the Audio Codec tab and de-select Audio then click Apply. Finally, select Browse and be sure to name your file something you'll recognize (you may need to use Finder to locate the video) and select the destination where you'd like it to save. Then, click Save. Go to the location you selected to locate the file. If you open it and it plays with audio, or you simply can't find it, go to Finder on your Mac, type the name in, and play the video. iMovie comes built into macOS and is pretty good for editing short videos. It includes an audio removal feature, just like VLC, and is an overall great option for Mac users. To delete audio from a video using iMovie, follow these steps: Launch iMovie and select Import Media in the center. Load your video, right-click it, and choose Select Entire Clip. Drag the video into the Timeline at the bottom of the screen to allow editing. Right-click on the timeline and select Detach Audio to split the file into pure video and pure audio tracks. Right-click the audio track and hit Delete. Select Export in the menu and save the video somewhere. Using a different filename ensures that your original isn't overwritten, allowing you to undo or redo any changes. You can delete the original file after you've made sure the new one is all you need. You can also use Adobe Premiere Pro to remove the audio files from any video quickly. Make sure you have the video stored on your computer, then open up Premiere and create a new project. In Premiere's standard layout, drag and drop your video into the library in the lower-left corner of your display. Double-click this file to load it into your preview monitor on the upper-left portion of the screen. Then click and hold the video icon below this. Drag and drop the video icon you're holding onto the timeline, and have Premiere set the sequence settings based on your file. Your video will now appear in the timeline with an audio file attached. Now export your video from Premiere while ensuring that your export matches your sequence settings. The resulting video file is the original video you imported into Premiere without audio attached, and it only takes about thirty seconds to complete. You might be working directly from your smartphone or tablet and cannot access a desktop PC. Mobile-only solutions are less feature-laden, but if all you need to do is strip out audio, then a single-purpose app can get the job done for you. For Android, try Mute Video, Silent Video. The app does what it says on the label—it takes a video shot on your phone and removes the audio track before saving it. You can then use the video as you see fit. For iOS, try VSilencer, which works similarly to the Mute Video, Silent Video app above. This app has a mini timeline where you edit your video and then save it while removing the audio track. VSilencer enables you to save or download your file to another device should you wish to. The only real downside of the smartphone-based apps is that they are significantly slower than desktop software. Mobile CPUs aren't really up to the challenge of handling large video files quickly (other than to play them), and so it may take a while. If speed is a necessity, then desktop solutions are the way to go. If you have a slow computer but a decent Internet connection, then using a web-based tool to remove your audio track might be the way to go. There are many apps available, such as Kapwing Mute Video. Kapwing has other free video tools online, but in this case, the mute video tool does all you need. It also gives you the ability to trim off material from the beginning of and of the video, which might be helpful. The resulting video doesn't have a watermark, and the service is high-speed.Final ThoughtsNo matter what device or application you use to delete audio from a video, the results will be the same, so choose whichever option best suits your needs.With today's technological advancements, smartphones can easily handle the job just as much as a PC or Mac, so no matter what device you're using, you'll be able to edit the audio in your video with ease.
