Thomas has no recollection of the outside world and soon discovers none of his companions do either. At the end of the glade there is a concrete-like structure which resembles a maze. Alby and Newt (two of the teens trapped in the glades) are known as maze runners. Their job is to discover as much of the Maze as they can. But the Maze is dangerous and is the home of many lethal creatures such as Grievors. SO everyday the two run the maze trying to map it out and find a possible exit.The first girl to enter the glade arrives just one day after Thomas. But a bunch of detrimental changes also come with her. The sun disappears, supplies stop and most importantly the Maze doors now remain open at night allowing the night creature to attack the Gladers out of the maze. Making an escape of the Glad even more imperative for the teens. Thomas has to escape but only by painstakingly gathering information from his fragmented memory, and pairing that with revelations gained from 'running' the maze can he hope to discover why he was placed in the maze and also how to find a means of escape with his allies. He then becomes, as the title of the Book suggests, another Maze Runner.UpdateJust an update on the movie for all those who love teen wolf. Dylan O'Brien is the star in the film. The Maze Runner is a 2009 young adult dystopian science fiction novel written by American author James Dashner and by first book released in The Maze Runner series. The novel was published on October 7, 2009, by Delacorte Press, an imprint of Random House, and was made into a 2014 major motion picture by 20th Century Fox, directed by Wes Ball. Thomas wakes up in the Glade with no memory of who he is or his past. He is surrounded by boys all just like him, no idea why they are there, some have been there as long as 2 years. They all keep the Glade running, they grow food, raise livestock, and perhaps the most important job - the runners. The runners go out every day exploring the giant maze surrounding the Glade, attempting to find an escape. Every night the doors close, and no one can get into the maze, or back out! When another Glader arrives, Teresa - the first girl Glader, things go from bad to worse. Eventually, they have to decide what to do. It was so exciting to watch everything unfold, with the terrifying grievors that live in the maze! This book was recommended for fans of the Hunger Games series, a series that will soon become one of your favourites. The plot was intriguing and will keep you asking for more. He is the last boy but not the last person to enter the Glade. The only thing he can remember when he comes into the Glade is his name, a common pattern amongst the Gladers. Chuck describes him as about 16 years old, of average height, and brown-haired. He was called "Greenie", a nickname given to new arrivals. He becomes a Runner with Minho after being the first person to spend a whole night(along with Minho) in the Maze and saves Alby when he is about to die. He has a telepathic connection with Teresa and was able to talk to her while she was in a coma. Teresa One of the main protagonists. The first girl and last person to enter the Glade. When she entered the Glade she was in a coma and Newt thought she was dead. She also calls Thomas "Tom". She has a telepathic connection with Thomas. She is also known to help Thomas out of the maze and fight the Grievors in the Griever Hole. She is thin, has black hair and blue eyes, and relatively pale skin. Alby The eldest and the leader of the Gladers. He is described as "The dark-skinned boy with short-cropped hair, his face clean-shaven". He tries to keep order within the group by having all the boys follow the rules they've set down to survive. He has a very close relationship with Newt, his second-in-command. He was in the group of 30 people who first arrived in the Glade. Alby commits suicide by walking into a group of Grievors, thinking that it was better that he die there than outside the Maze. Newt One of the main protagonists and is good friends with Thomas and Minho. He used to be a Runner but is no longer able-footed. He is very kind, friendly, and welcoming to Thomas. He is Alby's closest friend and second-in-command and takes over as leader when Alby no longer feels capable. Minho One of the main protagonists and is the Keeper of the Runners. He is in charge of navigating and mapping out the Maze. As a Runner, he's in very good shape and is described as "an Asian kid with strong, heavily-muscled arms and short black hair." He is sarcastic and a joker. He tends to react without thinking, which leads himself into trouble. He and Thomas quickly become good friends. Chuck A young and chubby boy with curly hair who was the newest Glader until Thomas arrived. He immediately becomes friends with Thomas and acts like a little brother towards him. Chuck was a "Slopper", one of the Gladers who handle all the dirty, distasteful jobs the others don't want. He is around 13 years old. He is killed by Gally after a knife is thrown at him while he is saving Thomas. Gally The main antagonist. A Glader who lives by the rules Alby put in place. He does not trust Thomas and shows an immense dislike for him. He is also the Keeper of the Builders. He runs away from the Glade in a fit of rage after exclaiming that he thought "Thomas was not to be trusted" in the Gathering. At the end of the book, he kills Chuck by throwing a knife into his chest. (shot with a gun in the movie) Ben A Builder. After undergoing the Changing and attempting to kill Thomas, he is banished to the Maze while still induced with the serum and still psychotic and dies overnight. Ava Paige The Chancellor of WICKED and the person responsible for sending teenagers into the Maze. She appears in the Epilogue in an e-mail. Grievors Biomechanical creatures that haunt and kill the Gladers in the maze. In "The Ending" they are let free onto the Glade to kill one person every day. The Maze Runner Book Review In brief, The Maze Runner is the story of a teenage boy, Thomas, and his band of friends who accomplish rather unbelievable feats to escape a devilishly designed maze. Oh yes, and all of them have no memories. That about sums it up. In the second book, The Scorch Trials, Thomas and his friends are again put through a series of perilous experiments in a ravaged world. This time the boys realize that they are undergoing trials for the greater good of the human race, in the hope of finding a cure for a disturbing, fatal illness known as "the Flare." The third book, The Death Cure, is Thomas and his surviving friends' fight to take down Wicked, the organization which has forced the experiments upon them. Thomas is the latest addition to the Glade - a large open green square, surrounded by an immense labyrinth. By day, the Glade is a place of hard work as boys dedicate themselves to their specific, important jobs: farming, cleaning, tending, killing. No job, however, is more important than that of the Runners - the smartest, quickest boys who go out into the Maze every day to document its paths and attempt to find an exit. The Runners must be quick because every day comes nightfall, the immense doors connecting the Glade to the Maze shut, and unspeakable monsters called Grievors roam the labyrinth. As the new boy (the "shank greenie"), Thomas grows increasingly frustrated when no one answers his questions about the Glade, the surrounding maze, and the Grievors that roam its exterior in the dark - but soon Thomas learns that the rest of the boys are just like him. None of them can remember anything prior to the box, nor do they recall why they are in the Glade or who put them there. All they know is their dedicated safe routine, and their preciptuous existence - work your job, keep your head down, and hope that the runners will one day find the exit to the elaborate, ever-changing maze. Until the day after Thomas's arrival, that is. Everything changes. There should not be another delivery from The Box for another month - but the following morning, someone else arrives in the Glade. A beautiful teenage girl bears a disturbing message. Everything is about to change. Somehow, both the new girl and Thomas are connected to the mystery of the Glade and its Maze, and they must do everything they can to find a way out and to lead the other Gladers to safety. The Maze Runner is every bit as delectable as advertised - it's everything I love in a novel. Isolated characters in an impossible setting, fighting for their lives - check. Futuristic sci-fi/post-apocalyptic/dystopian setting - check. Mass amounts of tension and violence - check. The only thing that could have made The Maze Runner even more of a "Thea book" would be to set it in outer space, with zombies and time travel in the mix somehow (then again, that may have been a tad much). My point is, I loved the setting and the premise for this novel. There is quite a few young adult survival of the fittest types of stories pervading the marketplace now, which may have some readers skeptical of another new similar title. Rest assured, dear readers - reminiscent of The Hunger Games by Suzanne Collins and the Gone books by Michael Grant, The Maze Runner is a shining new entry in this particular subgenre, completely worth your time. The most striking thing about The Maze Runner is the strength of its world-building and an adrenaline-fueled plot. This is akin to a novelization of Lost (one of my favorite television shows ever) - no one knows what's going on, and mystery and danger abound at every turn. Somehow, all these teenage boys have been transplanted to an isolated world surrounded by an ever-changing maze with only one objective - find a way out. The idea of the Glade and its surrounding, shifting maze, filled with heinous monsters is incredibly compelling and raises a number of questions - why are the boys there, and who put them there? Is there anything outside the Glade? Is it some sick experiment or type of imprisonment for crimes they have committed in the past? These questions and countless others are raised - and even more importantly, are addressed - in this provocative novel. Also impressive is the writing style of The Maze Runner. Similar to Patrick Ness's Chaos Walking books, The Maze Runner employs a particular new slang - the Gladers have evolved their own way of dealing with problems and speaking, using words like "shank," "greenie," "griever," among others. It's a little strange initially, just as it is strange to protagonist Thomas's ears, but makes sense in the context of the story. I don't want to say anything much about actual plot points as these are things best discovered upon reading without spoilers but suffice to say that the writing and plotting are irresistibly tight and crisp, and Mr. Dahsner knows how to write a thrilling mystery. Just when we receive an answer and one part of the puzzle is uncovered, that leads to an even larger question. And he manages to keep you interested in the story, dying to find out what's next, with only a minor level of annoyed "WTF is going on?"-ness (And trust me, as a long-time Lost devotee, I can honestly say in terms of the pace of revelations, The Maze Runner is not even close to the level of impotent frustration that it could have reached). These strengths in terms of pacing and plot reveals are also in part due to the strength of the main character, Thomas. Thomas is a clever young man and he asks all the right questions (whether or not he receives answers to them, well, that's a different story). Because Thomas is completely new to the Glade and the way of life of the boys there, his own burning questions and frustrations are ones that we share as readers, which makes for a very effective device. As far as protagonists go, Thomas is a fine one with a natural curiosity and ability to voice his opinions, even when they may not be the popular or safe choice. He's tenacious and brave, but not so flawless to render him one-note. Considering that Thomas and the other characters in the Glade cannot remember anything about their pasts, they are all distinctive, well-rounded characters and very believable. In particular, I loved Minho, Newt, Chuck, and Gally - each has its own charms and distinct personalities. The only character I wish we got to see more of and understand more was the lone female member of the cast, Teresa. We get tantalizing glimpses into her past and her abilities as linked with Thomas, but as she's in a coma and ostracized for most of this first book, we don't get to truly know her. However, this is something I think will be remedied in the next two books. In many ways The Maze Runner is a reflection of the Maze that surrounds the Glade itself - little pieces of the puzzle gradually are shuffled and revealed throughout the book, keeping readers on their toes. We keep guessing what could be next, and what each individual piece means until finally, the whole picture comes into dramatic crystal sharp clarity. And when you talk about a cliffhanger ending that leaves you salivating for more, I don't think you can get any more compelling or infuriating than the end of The Maze Runner (I'd put it on the level of The Knife of Never Letting Go by Patrick Ness).
